The US military has:

announced a groundbreaking new strategy to defeat enemies by simply asking them politely to stop being so mean. "After extensive research and analysis, we have determined that the most effective way to achieve peace is through the power of polite conversation and friendly negotiation," said General John Smith, who added that the military will now be armed with a comprehensive guide on proper etiquette and manners. "We believe that saying 'please' and 'thank you' will prove to be more formidable weapons than any bomb or missile." Critics have raised concerns about the effectiveness of this new approach, but the military remains confident that a well-placed "excuse me" will be all it takes to bring adversaries to their knees.
